In reply to the coroner, the master of the workhouse stated that the guardians had passed a special resolution refusing beer or alcoholic stimulante to inmetee on Christmas Day. The coroner said "it was quite unnecessary to pursue the inquiry further. For ressons best known to the guardians they had departed from the usual arrangement of allowing beer at the Christmas dinner. His own impression was that, instead of doing harm, a little alcoholic stimulant was beneficial as assisting to get rid of a heavy meal. What were the good things of earth sent for unless be enjoyed in moderation? Did they mean to tell him that a glass of wine or beer would hurt any living man? Cortainly not: in fact stimulants, he knew from a very long experience, had been the means of saving thousands of lives. They were es specially, beneficial in cases of weak action of the heart. He remembered a case in Nantwich, where a man, a tectotaller, went home at night and ate an enormous suppler. Next morning he was found dead in bed. The enormous quantity of food had filled the stomach, pressed upon the heart, and prevented an upward flow of blood. One of the stock objections of the French Re publicans to the Imperial régime was its expensiveness and one of their favourite argum inta in support of the form of government which they aimed at establishing was the great saving it tain that the Republic takes a good deal more the Empire did. The public debt and the arm. adget now than they did before the war with Garmany; and for this the Republic is not blame. But there is no reason why the Bervice should cost appreciably more now it did twenty years ago. Yet how does the t stand? In the Budget of 1871 the amount do manded under this head was £10,120,00). In the Budget of 1890 the same estimate figures for within a more trifle of £17.00 1.000. And there is nothing whatever to show for the increased expenditure. On the contrary, honest Republicans are beginning to admit that the miministrative machine works, on the whole, lass efficiently than it did in the time of "the tyrant."

We have not yet quite done with pirates There is a young man in custody in the Isle of Wight who has been going through some excellent training for a corsair. He is nineteen, and of course began his noble career by running away from home. He took shelter that night in a coment-mill, and stole the watchman's macintosh. At Southampton he stole a vacht's boat : at Northam he filched two more boats and some masthead lights, which he, no doubt, found very useful. In one of the stolen craft he sailed proudly down Southampton Water, lauded, and stole a lamb from a shepherd's hut. Like Porthos, he ate the whole of the lamb to his own knife and fork. It-agree l-with-him very well: but its skin was his ruin. After some more miscellaneous stealing, he ran away with a smack which was moored at Ryde, and attached thereto his own adventurous boot. 🗥 At Portslade the pirate was wrecked, and the presence of the lamb's skin in the boat in which he rowed ashore awoke the suspicions of the construerd, who have no sympathy with corsairs, and he was handed over to the police Master Gibbs, ex Roberts-for, like every adventurer, he has more than one name—began well but ended badlvi

Large sums of money were received during the Paris Exhibition period in aid of the building fund, for the daily number of visitors to the unfinished church averaged 3,500.

One of the latest anecdotes about the German Emperor, apropos of his economies in the matter of dress, states that his valet, in lately handing a coat to his Imperial master, humbly suggested that it was almost time to replace it with a new one. Taking up the coat and examining it minutely, the Kaiser said :- " Now tell me how much would you be able to get for this coat as y air perquisite if I were to wear it no more?" An American paper, the Providence Journal, tells the following story of two Bostonians, both literary people :- "The man had a sentimental fashion of constantly alluding to his wife, wh strangely enough, was seldom to be seen with him, and in the end 'i acquaintances became dreadfully weary of hearing him go on about his better half. One evening he was at a dinner given by a literary lady of note, and the conversation turned upon religion. There were opinions of various sorts, but the whole tone c the talk was serious until this man broke in by saying, in a most sentimental fashion: beautiful wife, she is my religion!" The company in general regarded the speaker with feel ings of anything but approval, and there was a moment of silence. 'Mr. G.' one of the ladies said, breaking the silence. 'I have always understood that a religion to be true must be universal. Is your wife universal P'

I have referred (says the London Figure) to the various steps taken by the German Emperor to eliminate French influence from his country as far as possible. But, not content with insisting on French terms being eliminated from the programmes of the Court balls and the menus of the State dinners, he has now seen fit to induce the Empress to assist in his anti-Gallic campaign. At a brilliant reception given by the Emperor and Empress at Potsdam, after his roturn from his last series of State visits, it was noticed with surprise that the Empress, instead of wearing her hair as usual done up on the top of her head, in the Parisian fashion, had had it arranged à la Marguerite, with the two long plaits which we have learned to know so well since Gounod's "Faust" was first produced. What is more, by the Emperor's orders numerous photographs of the Empress with her hair arranged in this characteristically German style have been taken, and will, of course, be exhibited in the shop windows all over the Fatherland, with aview of making the "Marguerite" coiffure generally fashionable in Germany.
